I am an educator and lifelong learner with experience as a teacher, researcher, ethnographer, curriculum developer, and in user experience. After more than ten years as an adult education instructor, I began exploring different career paths. I attended a code school and learned the basics of app development. I then went through a UX design program at UC San Diego. I want to use my experience in education and merge it with my tech obsession.

I have experience researching, interviewing, storyboarding, writing papers and proposals, building corresponding websites, and editing films. I have spent more than a decade of experience writing curriculum for a variety of classes, subjects, and in different learning environments (a jail classroom, traditional classroom, adults with special needs, and eLearning). I've spent my education and career thinking about how to represent people, consider what people's needs are, and enjoying the task of revealing these processes and people.

For the last few years, I have done contract work in tech as a copywriter, UX designer and researcher, and front end developer, while teaching part-time at Lane Community College. My career goal is to put all of this experience together and work as an instructional designer in technology. My ultimate goal is to work with a creative team in a collaborative environment. With my strong technical skills and my robust set of teaching, organizational, research and people skills, I believe that given the opportunity, I would make a great asset to any team. I am looking for a position where I can hone my current skills, and pick up a few more. If you have any questions, please don't hesitate to call (503) 307-8776. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Respectfully,

Cheryl Lewman
